StavrosK This is how 3D games work, too. Maybe they've finally put the power of modern GPUs to use. [The genetic control of adaptation to the temperature]. The studies of a number of experimental animals' species showed that the temperature is one of the key environmental factors determining the adaptive response of animals, its value being in the range of about 4-10 degrees C. In the animals' genome, the control of this response is realised by a cluster of genes. The genes of this cluster are called thermolimiters and it is important that their expression is increased in the presence of a negative environmental factor, the increase being greater the more negative the factor. The gene system of this cluster is inherited in the mendelian mode. It is shown that the thermostability of the heat-shock protein (Hsp) which mediates the protein-synthesising system in response to the increase of temperature is the most important thermolimiter, as it manifests the adaptation of the gene system to a wide range of temperatures. { "name": "Lennon", "author": "Max Ogden", "license": "CC-BY-3.0", "icon": "82157476af
